New dog training school opens in Quarteira

Dog trainer João Paulino with "Elektra"

INAUGURATION || 'Iron Dog', a new dog training centre, will open this Sunday (June 5) at 8am in Quarteira.

The school, in a quiet rural area, boasts an outdoor grass training field, "naturally shaded by hundred-year-old trees", as well as a pool which dogs and owners can use for training together on hot days.

It will offer a variety of courses, such as obedience, social and behaviour training.

The person in charge is 38-year-old João Paulino, who has been working in the dog training business for over 10 years. He has since gained a national reputation for his work in several events and competitions across Portugal.

In fact, Paulino will be available to help owners either simply train their dogs, or prepare them to enter competitions.

"Every dog of every age and breed is welcome and has the capacity to learn," he said, admitting however that "the earlier they start, the better".

Paulino promises to offer "fun and dynamic training for both dogs and owners", which will be goal-based "in order to achieve the expected results".

'Iron Dog' is part of the Portuguese Canine Club (Clube Português de Canicultura) and will host several national events and competitions.

Swimming is important for dogs

Paulino also spoke about the importance of swimming in a dog's life, especially in "maintaining a healthy physical condition and reducing stress and pain".

"Dogs have to be taught not to be afraid of water. Owners should encourage them to enter the water out of their own free will," he explained.

At 'Iron Dog', Paulino says the pool is safe and adapted so that dogs can easily get in and out as they please.
